pecial Correspondence of The Star.

NEW YORK, June 27.—Those who come together and discuss the prophecies, rather than the facts, of fashion, are vitally interested in repeated news from Paris that the fashions of the first empire are to be revived.

There is no evidence as yet that the tallors will launch high waisted coats, beget into tailored sults and the men's coats of that day did not emphasize the high waist line of the gowns.

Possibly, we will wear the Napoleonic coats with the high collar and cape, and there is whispered talk here and there of a knotted sash around the coat of dull colored red, and short streamers finished with fringe. These are the sashes now worn by young officers in our military training schools. It is probable that the war has lasted long enough for the designers to have gotten over the first horror of it and that there will creep into the autumn fashions such military accessories as sashes brass buttons and short sories as sashes, brass buttons and short coats with their trig, fitted lines.

For Evening, First Empire.

Apart from what women will borrow for their street suits from the men of the Napoleonic period, the evening gown that is already launched in Paris is copied in a modified manner from the fashion originated by the Empress Josephine.

The houses of Paquin, Lanvin and Martial et Armand are contributing to this revival of the first empire, throwing back more than half a century with the flicker more than half a century with the micker of their scissors.

So far as we have seen sketches of these new gowns, one of which is reproduced today, they are not actually empire. They have the empire waist line, however, and this is the strikingly important feature.

For eighteen months we have struggled with the pointed baseue, the sash over

For eighteen months we have struggled with the pointed basque, the sash over the hips, the normal waist line belted in and the corset with the pinched-in sides to give us the appearance of an indentation at the waist, and now it appears that all these struggles are to be abandoned and swept aside with a degree of finality and that the waist line will rise to the bust with a straight line below it to the ankles.

When this waist line for the sash over the straight features of the gowns worn during the latter part of the eighteenth century and the first part of the nineteenth. It has a dash of orientalism in the front panel, which is embroidered with paris to the ankles.

When this waist line is established and the world has taken in the fact that all the immediate past is to be quickly forgotien, the designers will probably give us the exquisite gowns of the Josephine period.

this to the flour mixture, beating all quickly to a smooth dough; roll out on a floured board, cut into biscuit and bake in a quick oven for twenty minutes.

Herring and Cheese Canapes.

Prepare the canapes by cutting slices of bread half an inch thick, then stamping out two small rounds from each slice. Fry a light color and spread with the herring paste. Meanwhile put about a cupful of left-over cheese in a small saucepan and stand it in a vessel of boiling water on the stove. Add two tablespoonfuls of milk and a piece of saleratus the size of a small bean. Stir frequently until it is quite smooth. Then put the prepared canapes on a bakepan and divide the melted cheese equally over them and put in the oven about five or six minutes to heat. Serve immediately on hot plates.

Cut some slices of bread a quarter of an inch, trim and fry them as directed for the cheese canapes. Remove the skin and bones from the sardines and lay one or two, according to their size, on each canape. Then about five minutes before serving time put in the oven on the shelf to get hot.

"Oh, Mr. Toad, will Peter die?" sobbed little Mrs. Peter.

"Die! Who said anything about daying! I didn't." Mr. Toad spoke sharply. "I suppose Peter will die some time, but it will take more than three cabbage leaves to kill him." There was a twinkle in Old Mr. Toad you geyes. "How do you feel, Peter?"

"My stomach feels all right now, but I can't use my hind legs," replied Peter and gave a feeble kick of two to show hou little use he had of them. "Do—do you suppose I'll ever be able to run again?"

"If you do as I tell you, you will. You'll be as ever," replied Old Mr. Toad, gruffly. "Poison always goes to the legs. They'll be as good as ever in a day or two, only until they are you musn't eat anything. Give your stomach and your legs a rest. And when you get well, take my advice and keep out of Farmer Brown's garden."

"I will, indeed I will," promised Peter, and he meant it.

Herring Canapes.

Prepare the canapes by cutting slices of bread half an inch thick, then cutting them across diagonally, forming wo three-cornered pieces out of each slice. Fry these pieces in oil or butter to a nice golden brown. Then spread each with herring paste, dip the longest corners in finely chopped parsley and pile in the center a small teaspoonful of finely chopped hard boiled egg. Put them in the refrigerator until needed to serve.

Old Doctor Toad.

Can you think of any one more home y than Old Mr. Toad? He is so homely that some folks call him ugly looking but I never can quite agree with this. Perhaps this is because I know him so well. And he is just as gruff as he is with gabardine, and it will also be very frequently used with georgette crepe.
Fall frocks are to be longer than those worn during the last two or three seasons, six inches from the ground being given as the correct length.
Narrower lines are also to be featured in the fashionable skirts. However, of the longer and narrower skirts in practically all models developed and shortly to be placed on the market, and upper and lower skirt are shown, the underneath skirt alone being long and somewhat narrow (never a hobble effect), while the upper or real skirt flares quite as frankly as do the gowns of the present season.

When he came puffing and wheezing in to the dear Old Brier Patch to where Peter Rabbit lay you would have thought to have heard him that Peter had forced him to come all that long distance from Farmer Brown's garden when all the 'time he had come wholly out of the goodness of his heart because Peter was sick. He was almost tired as Spotty the Turtie, and he puffed and he wheezed and he homely. When he came puffing and Rabbit!" he snapped. "Always knew there was something wrong with your head. It's empty. That's what's the matter with it; it's empty. Anybody but silly worms ought to know better than to eat poisoned cabbage leaves. You ought to be sick. I'm not sorry for you a bit, not a bit."

Now this wasn't true, and Peter knew it. He knew that it was just Old Mr. Toad's way. He knew that Old Mr. Toad never would have come all this long way from Farmer Brown's garden but for one thing, and this was that he was sorry for Peter. So Peter slyly winked at Mrs. Peter and said nothing. "Serves you just right." Mr. Toad grumbled. "No business to be up in that garden any way. Couldn't you find enough to eat at home? Never saw such a fellow for getting into trouble. How many of those cabbage leaves did you eat?"

"Only three," replied Peter, very Colly three," replied Peter, very meekly.

"Huh! Three too many," snapped Old Mr. Toad. "Poison on every one of them, for I saw it put on."

Now, until Old Mr. Toad had mentioned it Peter hadn't even guessed what was the matter with him and neither had little Mrs. Peter. They had though his sickness was from overeating. The truth hadn't once entered their heads.

"Oh, Mr. Toad, do you really mean that Peter has been poisoned?" walled little Mrs. Peter.

Old Mr. Toad stared at sher. "Of course I mean it," he snapped. "Do you mean to tell me that you didn't know what alied him?"

Little Mrs. Peter nodded through her tears. Peter himself had turned very pale. The thought of poison frightened him terribly. He understood now why he had felt so terribly Ill, so much show a day proceed to drop it gently with a tablespoon into the fat.
